And did you ever try cheese cutlets? Put two tablespoonfuls butter in a saucepan and, while melting, add four level tablespoonfuls cornstarch, a saltspoonful salt and a dash of white pepper or paprika. When blended add one cup rich milk; stir until smooth, then add one cup mild American cheese cut into small pieces and one-half cup grated Parmesan. Mix thoroly, spread in buttered cutlet molds and pat into shape with the hands, and when stift, egg, crumb and fry in deep fat.

their hearts to near bursting, as one supreme effort followed another, weary with the rapid alternation of victory and defeat, with faces powder-black-ened and throats seared with a burning thirst, the men of the Army of the Po-tomac gathered around their little campfires to boil their coffee and munch their hardtack and pork. They were too stunned by the awful events of the day now to gossip as usual and com-pare notes. They would do this later on. Later, when the awful shocks had on. Later, when the awful shocks had lost something of their deadening effect, they would gather in little groups and get from each other a correct idea of the battle. There was hardly yet time for sadness for the loss of comrades whose touch of elbow would be felt no more, for the brave boys who had lined up with them at Antietam, at Fredericks burg, at Chancellorsville, at Gettysburg and who were now mustered out for ever. The bitterness of their loss would come in after days, when they would be seen no more around camp or in drill, and when the Orderly-Sergeant, calling the roll by rote, would forgetfully call out names to which there could be no answer. In the unutterably exhausted brains of the men there was now room for only one thought-wonder what the
